Harold Mills has spent his career successfully developing and leading technology and human resource businesses. As CEO of the award-winning ZeroChaos, Mr. Mills oversees the strategic direction and market development for one of the top global workforce management companies. Mills is attributed with building ZeroChaos, headquartered in Orlando, from inception to a multi-billion dollar company with operations in over 15 countries.

Do you have a favorite story from your years of owning a business in Orlando? One of our clients once told us that ZeroChaos was the only firm they'd jump off a cliff with, confident in the fact that we'd have figured out how to land before we hit bottom.

How have you seen your business evolve over the years? In a very short time, ZeroChaos went from a moment where we literally had a thousand dollars in the company checking account to a nearly three billion dollar global entity. We've grown in leaps and bounds, almost regardless of economic conditions, illustrating the value of our model to our customers.

What is the inspiration for your store/business? The ZeroChaos mission is to change the way companies procure contingent labor through innovations driven by true vendor neutrality. That allows our company to make decisions for our customers based on their best interests, without margin pressures from other divisions.

What is the next big thing for your business? We're excited about creating more value and new innovations for our customers globally as we expand our footprint into more countries and create new and extended product and service innovations.
